Pulton Theatre last night a farce in three acts called "Arms and the Girl." It was a war play in that its action passed in a Belgian town after the invasion of the Germans. It turned out to be amusing and rather more harmless than was intended. The young American girl caught in a Belgian town awaiting the arrival of her betrothed was com-nelled at the risk of seeing him arrested is a spy to marry a countryman accidentially in the same place who had at-rempted to befriend her. The betrothes arrived after the ceremony and had to pretend to be a chauffeur. He was quarlered outside the hotel with the soldiers.
When the German officer had brought about the marriage there was no further recessity of the military atmosphere. It was exercised without effect to keep the no young people as close as a bride and ridegroom are expected to be under thing case. There was also a loving cup. The general ordered all lights out at a. "Pair and Warmer" impended temography. At least the audience thought here might later be a repetition of the impotent piquancy of "His Bridal Night." Unlickly for the expectant first nighters, reither of these events came to satisfy their hopes. Only ombres chinoses, with the bride preparing for signal here. with the bride preparing for sleep be-bind a lighted window, were there to take the place of what the audience had been led to expect. The gutteral side of the characterization was well enough looked after by J. Malcolm Dunn as a Beuteral and Henry Voxel as a general. Then there were some incidental soldiers well trained in Gaensechritt but decident in Schrecklichkeit. The spectatory of the Cathedral of the management of the first and the farkened here when the first only resented the commonplace sequence of the first act, which was not in the least what they had been led to expense for the first in the least what they had been led to expense for the first shelt audiences—should not be missed in such delicate matters.
